

ABSTRACT

A video processing device includes an audio event detector and a memory that stores video data and audio data corresponding to the video data. The audio event detector detects an audio event in the audio data and indexes the video data at about a beginning of the audio event.